I will probably supplement with illustrations given time.

supplement documents:
description of scenarios in game
describing the anamolies mechanics

Some character parallels that are not completely flattering(this game has gatcha slop vibes ive said):

This is to document a game(games) I dreamt of. The game seemed to be a mobile game however the way I experienced it was not like a mobile game. There was a mission select where it kinda reminded me of terminals from like ZZZ but they had multiple animations that involed manual manipulation of keys, switches, levers, etc. The setting is hard to place but felt like a tropical asian area, japan was a heavy influence it seems. The “missions” or tasks to be taken involved taking in anomalies, somewhat like SCP.

I can’t really say these felt incredibly SCP=inspired all the time. One was extremely scp inspired and involved playing a machine with a crt machiine where within it there was a ronald reagan slot machine game that somehow became nefarious towards the end. Some the anomalies “adopted” became mainstays in my player character’s facility. The most notable included this quadripedal robot that acted like a dog and had a square within it to represent its core. While it was “allied” with me it was an asshole to me a lot and treated my badly like a badly misbehaved dog would. There were other anomalies that were more friendly and stayed past the time they were "completed"

One was a red thin character who acted quirky and talked in short sentences. Another was pretty mysterious and I observed had eyes that were its main defining characteristic. I remember an anomaly that was in the form of a flat screen tv that had what seemed like a normal game attached to it that was kind of like a wii game. It was extremely unfair and i remember commenting that it punishes you for being more skilled than not. Another anomaly i found fairly scary and difficult to deal with. It involved a senile powerful man who liked trying to find a knife and wielding around and eventually trying to harm people around him with it. The man also was rather persistent and could have me locked down in rooms trying to find a way to proceed with him.

I dont really understand if these anomalies were the main gameplay loop but they seemed a rather big draw for the game with other players commenting on me having certain anomalies in my "hideout" like one that was apparently a chill guy. I will try to explain the characters and plot now.

Back story seems to be there is a sort of meat empire of violent portions and often cubic portions of meat (pretty large like 1 meter cubes id say.) They apparently started as fairly benign things but eventually evolved into much stronger organized powerful things that eventually have some sort of king. I feel like fighting these things was the main combat loop and gameplay may have been like a borderlands/zzz hybrid.

The main playable character kind of seemed like an asshole. He seemed amnesiac and introduced himself about talking about all the classic video games he liked that ended with "man" (ie megaman pacman) he also donned a name ending in man however i forget it but i think he based it on a game he played. He seems borderline homeless but is living in some sort of apartment. The first scene is p much him getting a call about a woman getting beaten by some police or police-esque force. I think this is important to note because his response is either saying "that's bad ill take care of it" and another one much more supportive of the police and pro authoritarianism i suppose. The reason this is important is because choosing the 3 consecutive dialogue options borderline approving of police brutality seem to lead into sort of a "fascist" route of gameplay. Apparently it allows access to like palintir-esque supercop/military cop technology and gear. In my time playing the game I do not think i chose the fascist route but i think i planned on doing so in a future play through.

Saving this woman getting hurt by police seems to introduce us to the other most important character which is the woman getting beat. I think she was also seen earlier eating at a ramen place or something acting dismissive of the main character. Anyways after being saved we seem to learn she is in a fairly similar place as the protagonist. Her main color is green. She also seems amnesiac and basically homeless. She also has a weapon underneath one of her shoes that is a pistol it seems that becomes the main characters main weapon/starter weapon. Her personality is kind of like an authoritarian/fascist rei ayanami. She did look like a gacha coomer character. I think her personality is influenced by the choices you make. After talking I think she talks about finding her way to some employment ig and goes to work at like a massage parlor i think which the protagonist is upset about and has the option to drop his current task to come see what the girl is doing. These options make the game rather different and leave permanently missed content based on what you choose. I remember that a big thing was this weird elevated restaurant.

Id say the city this game takes place in look like a combination of cyberpunk 2077's night city and whatever the city in ZZZ is. This restaurant is very large and elevated on like 1 huge support from the sea floor that it is presumably supporting itself one. This city felt rather aquatic and was in like a bay or just a seaside city. This restaurant was basically a wcdonalds anime type deal. I never went into the restaurant proper. It seemed kinda not good with its kinda cheap tasteless ads on the outside and it seemed like it was a poor japanese recreation of american food. Ig it doesn't only do american food though because this one person working at the restaurant told me that i could eat at the restaurant for free because they were having mexican food that night and because having foreigners eat there would make local japanese people think the place is legit. This detail is just weird kinda blurred distinction between dream and my real self. The important thing about this structure is there was this very cavernous large extremely guarded vertical door that was basically underneath the structure. I went in there and fought something that resembled like a piranha plant but the thing was pretty epic.

I always remember being in conflict with the green girl. I think there is sexual tension between them, mostly on the main character's part. She was guarded and closed I think

One "quest" i remember was pretty weird. I was first of all observing this film crew in like some sort of supervisor's nest with a window viewing a quarry. I communicated with them by drawing stuff on the window. Eventually I'm talking to some I dont know if even related guy about his dream at making it in filmmaking. Im pretty sure he was japanese. He wanted to elevate his medium to something comparable to american cinema. I almost thought it was like an interview but the scene being shot had him on an elevated chair on the left, and an exaggerated huge film camera on the right manned by some white guy. Everything was lined with red velvet around it.

I remember some like fat mission operator guy had a thing where he called you from payphones along this one highway and he acted like the joker for some reason and called himself like the grinway menace or something

I remember a lot of destrucible environmental pieces that held valuables often it was protruding objects of the level geometry.

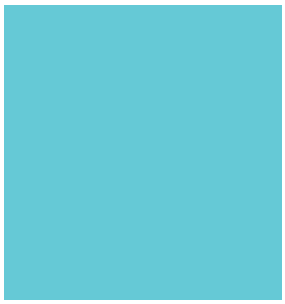

The creator of this game seemed like a huge loser. He was like a fat japanese guy who probably didn't go outside much and just seemed pretty pathetic. The was merch for the game at a restaurant in japan that was like sushi that had the flavor of "chicago pizza", I think it had small cutouts of colored fishcakes to represent imagery from the game on it.

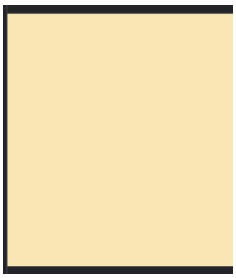

The reception of the game seem kinda mixed, Mainly the apparently beginning life of the game's gameplay loop. I think the fragmented dreams I had were almost two different games but at the same time i think they had connections and I think i will continue to believe they have connections whether it is actually true or not. The initial reception of the game is that it was pretty lazy. The main girl characters were kinda dressed like ninjas but they only had occasional stealth and like ninja gaiden esque movement sections to try to flimsily justify it. It seems this dropped off.

I remember one of the anomalies who was kinda just a chill guy eventually got led into being brought into a conference room where apparently I have learned forbidden demonic knowledge and was going to get killed. I had like 2 other people with me who tried to seduce and have sex with the demon's to try to get past out punishment, quid pro quo, however that failed when some guy who was higher in chain of command came in and was upset and smited us. I remember an area earlier in the first fragmented game that was called like "little madrid" it had spanish architecture although now that i look at real madrid architecture i cant really say it looks like it. Id say the architecture looks like yharnam but very different in color more sepia toned, the buildings were warm and peach/beige colored and sky was rather bright and blue. I remember someone i know talking abbott a bakery they liked in one of these buildings, I went in, it was very ornate maybe comparable to the buildings in the film adaptation of the phantom of the opera. The interior was pretty warm peach toned and there was red velvet carpet lining the walkways. There were huge crystal chalendaliers that were eye-level to me as i was on the second floor of the building. I got a pastry that had a creamy cheesy feeling.

Imagine this building but like mostly mono coloured as the a warm peach color with a vibrant blue sky.

This part of the game included the senile character. I also was a coastal city i believe and was connected it felt with the "docked hideout" This docked hideout was my most remembered hideout. I had anomalies walking around, mostly the friendly ones. The interior was mostly modern. The exterior kinda looked like a chateau at sea somehow suspended on a boardwalk although there were multiple building materials even pretty rustic things made of dark brown wooden planks.

I remember people complaining about microtransactions however from what i could see the were mainly lootboxes. I think there were character skins and maybe lootboxes and people did not seem to like them and certain boxes were very high priced.